The ulpan approach in absorbing immigrants into their new home

My paper will present the system of intensive courses for immigrants as a productive way to enable them to absorb the language and the culture of their new homeland. This system was applicable to absorbing millions of Jewish people who, for a variety of reasons, migrated to Israel from the places where they were born. The system was introduced after the Second World War and bore great fruit. The system is described in my paper as a model for better integration between individuals and communities in Europe.
